PERSONALITY PROFILE 'Mikey'

One very independent individual who knows exactly what he is doing - and will do whatever it is he wants, when he wants.

Very few people are allowed to get to know him well - and he is not really interested in other people unless they are useful to him. He chooses his friends to impress, rather than out of any altruistic feelings and genuine warmth for them.

This writer is a very good actor and can talk the hindlegs off a donkey! He will grasp every opportunity to enhance his personal and material position, and is determined to stay on top of every situation. He is a clever manipulator of people and is always wearing his chameleons' coat.

Tough and uncompromising, he will use whatever means necessary to achieve his goals. He quickly picks up on people's weaknesses and is easily angered by either their incompetence or lack of co-operation. Certainly if he feels that someone is not 'playing the game' or acceding to his wishes then he will exert pressure upon them in whatever way he can. As he is very astute, it will either be by 'sinister charm', apparent naivety, or sheer 'brute force'. He has very little respect for authority and will not conform to the natural courtesies expected generally by everyone.

This is not a straightforward character in any sense of the word. He keeps his true motives and thoughts well hidden, and no-one is allowed to get to know him well. This man is determined to acquire as many possessions as he can, whether they be material or individuals - for he recognises and needs the security and protection that they can, at best, give him.

He had a very domineering paternal figure who was most difficult to get along with - and much of who Mikey is now is the result of a rather tempestuous relationship with this man. His mother was overruled by the men in her life and circumstances and therefore although she cared deeply for her children was unable to protect them from the baser influences within the family. The writer recognises this and perhaps his most redeeming feature is the fact that he is now very protective, when he remembers, of her. Nonetheless, this woman was a survivor.

This is the writing of a man who will always live by his wits and although poorly educated, he is nobody's fool and can, when the occasion arises, be all things to all people. Generally he is motivated only by greed, materialism and sensuality - the latter being totally disconnected from any emotion.
